LOVE and MARRIED LIFE by the noted author Idah McGlone Gibson

LETTER FROM JOHN.

I hastily tore open the envelope and my heart grew cold as I read the words scrawled across one side of a note sheet. The note began most formally. "My dear Katherine,"

"Although your letter did not say so, I read between the lines and I know that the money you probably borrowed from Alice has given out. You went away without my permission, and against my command. I would be still sitting myself if I asked you to return. Consequently, you will have to come back to me as you went, at your own pleasure."

After reading that letter, all my philosophy dropped from me like a discarded garment. I was like a woman distraught. I could not reason; I could not think! All I was conscious of was a hurt in my heart that was so great that its ache was physical.

How long I sat with that letter in my hand, gazing sightlessly upon the ocean which was booming in with great waves that were the precursor of a storm, I do not know.

"He doesn't want me! He doesn't want me! He is happier without me!" Struck by Brutality.

I said this over and over to myself, as the brutality of his letter struck me, with each personal, anew. I wasn't aware of any sudden decision, but it seemed to me that without willing it I found myself outside the hotel and on the board walk. The heavens had suddenly darkened. There was a peculiar twilight coloring over everything. The board walk was deserted.

I seemed to feel that nature was preparing for as great an upheaval as I. Something about the atmosphere produced in me the feeling of exaltation. The whole world seemed to be waiting against the complacency of every-day things.

The manager of the hotel was standing outside, gazing at the sky with a worried look, and he courteously informed me that I had no umbrella, and that if I had to go far the storm probably would be upon me before I reached shelter.

"I haven't far to go," I said, with no pretension of where my black mood would carry me.

The wind was now blowing a gale and the waves were coming up above the board walk with a boom that told me that the ocean accepted the gauge thrown down by the wind with defiance.

It was almost all I could do to stand, but some way I walked the distance between the hotel and the steel pier, happy in the fact that my physical battle with the wind was making me forget some of my great mental disturbance.

Laughs at Word "Safe." "Way out onto the steel pier I went, fighting breathlessly, even after I had been warned by the custodian that it was not safe. In fact, I positively laughed at the word "safe!" Safe from what? The pain, heart hunger and sorrow that had been mine ever since my marriage? I looked at a great, green, incoming wave that was rolling up, up far above the pier, and it seemed to me that it would only be "safe" when I was sinking out of sight beneath it!

It seemed to be calling, beckoning to me, and I watched it, fascinated by its force and beauty. Then I think I had a sane moment, for I resolutely turned to retrace my steps. I did not go far, however, when a kind of caginess which was quite different from the twilight which had been enveloping the earth settled down about me.

I think it was curiosity which made me turn. I never have seen the clouds so low, so black. It seemed to me that the roar of the wind had died away into a long-drawn sigh.

"Come! Come!" beckoned the waves, "and we will give you rest!" Slowly I took a few steps forward and then stopped. Again came the mournful sound of the wind, and it seemed as though the clouds dropped lower, when far out I saw the white cap of an incoming wave. Suddenly I made up my mind that when that wave came near enough to the shore to make it possible I should accept the invitation of the sea and go to its embrace!

Thrill of Anticipation. I watched its incoming with an awed thrill of anticipation. Nearer and nearer it came! Would it mean rest? Was it sleep eternal? In a moment I should know. I drew nearer and nearer to the rail, a part of which had been broken earlier in the day by wind and storm.

Carefully I calculated the seconds it would take for my wave to reach me, and then just as I decided that it was time and had placed my hands upon the broken rail through which I meant to leap to that blessed bourne, I felt a strong grip on my shoulder and a voice, in which was blended pain and exasperation, said sternly:

"Katherine! Katherine, don't be a fool!" (To Be Continued Monday)

HAVE COLOR IN CHEEKS Be Better Looking—Take Olive Tablets

To have a clear, pink skin, bright eyes, no pimples, a feeling of buoyancy like childhood days, you must keep your body free from poisonous wastes. Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets (a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil) act on the liver and bowels like calomel—yet have no dangerous after effect. Take one nightly and note results. They start the bile and overcome constipation. That's why millions of boxes are sold annually. 10c and 25c.

FASHION'S MODES

Satin charmeuse draped with beaded georgette is conservative but always satisfactory.

The smartest hat of the season is the little turned up hat of cloth, brightened with a bit of gold or silver embroidery.

Jersey dresses are still worn and they have permanently adopted the long string belt.

Self-covered buttons have never been more fashionable, especially for tailored frocks.

Novelty weaves in tricotees are being used for spring blouses.

There are some interesting domestic smocks of wool jersey.

"SWEET MARIE" GANZ
"Sweet Marie" Ganz, who threatened the life of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and served time in jail for it, has renounced her allegiance to the red flag.

NOTES FROM PARIS

New hats appear earlier than new spring gowns do. Perhaps it would be more correct to say that hat fashions are changing all the time, since each fortnight in Paris sees the rise and fall of some favored model.

A good rule to follow, is that there should be no hard edges. Even the close fitting cap like toques achieve the desirable softness of outline by a soft drapery, a somewhat shaggy garland of velvet flowers or large flower petals, or a mass of feathers. Those toques are serviceable when made in draped American cloth (the kind which once covered nursery table tops or provided covers for school books), boldly embroidered in brushed wool.

THE NEW FEATHERS.
A new straw is much in evidence and varnished straw in tube form, cut into short lengths and stitched on to a foundation of net. It looks rather like the beads which enterprising youngsters used to make from macaroni.

Feathers are much worn and may either be in stiff quills, stuck aslant, propeller fashion, or in a straight, waving mass of fronds entirely covering the hat.

FANCY LINGERIE.
It is the day of fancy lingerie, and it must be admitted that eccentricity often enters the arena in this connection. Many are of the opinion that underwear should always be pure white, very fine and washable; it is not enough that it should be "cleanable." But this is rather an old-fashioned notion.

A FRIEND RECOMMENDED THEM.
A person often does more good than he realizes when he tells a suffering friend how to get well. J. N. Tohill, clerk Lottie Hotel, Evansville, Ind., writes: "For weeks I suffered constantly with pains in the muscles of my thigh. I was treated by the doctor for rheumatism but found no relief. Upon recommendation of a friend, I tried Foley Kidney Pills and began to get relief almost immediately." Good for backache, rheumatic pains, stiff joints. —A. B. McIntyre Drug Co.—Advertisement.
